JUDGE ADMONISHES BLACKMAIL LAWYERS

Warns Leatherwood and Christensen to Discontinue "Persiflage."

Special to The Tribune.

OGDEN, March 28.—Owing to the time required for the members of the jury to examine the formation of letters to which the expert had called attention, Theodore Kytka did not complete his direct testimony in the brief session of court today, which marked the close of the second week in the trial of Joseph Henry Martin. According to the attorneys, Kytka will complete both his direct and cross-examination by Monday evening.

On the request of the attorneys, Judge J. A. Howell adjourned at 12:30 o'clock until Monday morning. Because of this arrangement court will be convened all next week at 9 a. m. instead of 10 o'clock as formerly. Kytka contends that he can complete his direct testimony in the first hour on Monday, after which Attorney Christensen will enter upon the cross-examination.

Attorneys, jurymen and spectators showed the effects today of the long grind of handwriting evidence. With scarcely a ripple of variation, the nature of the testimony for the past three days has been the same, letters and figures, followed by long waits during which the exhibits were passed to the jurymen. Instead of the packed courtroom, there were at no time more than fifty persons in the room in addition to the relatives of the defendant during the day's session.

Tossily in an effort to relieve the monotony, Attorneys Leatherwood and Christensen indulged in more than their usual amount of verbal sparring, much of it being what is popularly known as "kidding," and having no special reference to the matter in controversy. Judge Howell to desist, under penalty of an all-day session of court.

When about to adjourn court for the day Judge Howell administered a final warning, requesting the attorneys to eliminate the "persiflage." Both attorneys professed ignorance of just what the judge referred to. Later Judge Howell explained that he sought a word which the jury probably would understand, but had unwittingly struck upon one which was too deep for the attorneys.

The handwriting expert during his testimony yesterday completed his consideration of the capital letters in the various specimens and devoted all of his time today to small letters and figures. In the 178 samples of the small letters in the standard documents Kytka found a habit characteristic in the clean-cut dainty dash or cross stroke which intersected the stem evenly 143 times, at above it 23 times and to the left 12 times. The same style of letters appears in the disputed documents 208 62 and 35 times, respectively, with 11 capital letters with the dash to the right of the stem. Only three of the letters were not crossed in the black-mail letters and only one in the standard documents.

With regard to the small letter "g," the expert called particular attention to the similarity in the endings of the word "rings" in the standards and black-mail documents. All of the letters "g" were written with the top open and in the word mentioned the final "s" was not connected and appeared in the printed style. This was characteristic where the word was found in both standard and disputed documents.

Kytka gave but slight attention to the sign "S," indicating that in both the standards and questioned writings the writer had squeezed the "s" portion of the sign in between the upright lines instead of allowing the lines to intersect the "s." During the final hour of the session he discussed the figures 8, 2, 5, 3 and 0. His principal points regarding the construction of these were the apparent backward style of writing the "8" and the pear-shaped ciphers.

ELWELL IN JAIL.

Father Who Took Child into Saloons Pleads Guilty; Baby Sent Home.

Special to The Tribune.

OGDEN, March 28.—Leaving the father, Isaac Elwell, in the city jail to pay the penalty of a charge of unlawful intoxication, Mrs. Kate Carter returned to her home at Preston, Idaho, today with the 2-year-old child found in possession of Elwell yesterday when he was arrested. The father was taken into custody when Patrolman James Hearn found the father intoxicated and taking the child with him from one saloon to another.

The arrival of Mrs. Carter, the grandmother of the child, brought out the information today that Elwell had disappeared with the child from his home in Preston Thursday evening, leaving his wife with a new-born baby. The relatives and friends could secure no trace of either man or child until he was arrested in this city yesterday morning.

The father was arraigned before Judge W. H. Reeder in the police court this morning on a charge of intoxication, and pleaded guilty but the judge took the case under advisement. Elwell is still confined in the city jail.

Does Not Regulate Price.

Special to The Tribune.

OGDEN, March 28.—Joseph Streng, one of the heaviest wool buyers of the west, has arrived at the conclusion that tariff does not regulate the price of that commodity, according to the information brought back to Ogden by C. R. Hollingsworth. On a business trip to Great Falls, Mont., the local attorney met Mr. Streng, who declared that he had been buying large quantities of wool at 174 cents a pound, or more than he paid in the two years. Mr. Streng was the first wool buyer to ship wool from Canada under the free trade.

COLONISTS PRESSED INTO WAR SERVICE

General Carranza Forces Three Months to Aid Him and Then Abandon Them, Helpless.

Special to The Tribune.

DOUGLAS, Ariz., March 28.—Impressed into service, despite their protests, under penalty of arrest and imprisonment for refusal, forced to accompany 500 rebels and General Carranza from Colonia Moriles, sixty miles south of Douglas, to Barreuel, Chihuahua, sixty miles south of Juarez, James Fenn, Lee J. Huber and J. D. Lillywhite, with their teams and wagons, were left stranded by Carranza in Chihuahua, without food for themselves or their animals for the return trip of 200 miles.

The men telegraphed Bishop C. W. Lillywhite, a refugee from Mexico at Douglas, for funds. They were former residents of Payson and Beaver, Utah, and were engaged in operating a colony flour mill, which was forced to suspend when the men were impressed into service. Carranza promised them a permit to return in three days when they assisted his commissary over the continental divide on the Sierra Madre. They were, however, compelled to remain with the column until the rebels reached the railroad, and were not heard from until today.
